NONSENSE ABOUT TOBACCO

One of the physicians attending Col. Roosevelt has attributed his superb physical condition to his outdoor life, to the wisdom of his diet, to the fact that he drinks hardly any alcohol, and does not smoke. Another physician, who is miles away from Chicago, writes: "It is a notable fact, as I am informed, and one that should be brought to the attention of the public for what salutary effect it may have upon the individual mind, that the three principal candidates for the Presidency do not use tobacco."

Thus is an attempt made to stretch a useful lesson into a most useful lesson. In what respect is the "fact" that President Taft, Col. Roosevelt, and Gov. Wilson do not smoke to be regarded as "notable"? They live the most different kinds of life. Col. Roosevelt, rides, shoots, plays tennis, swims, and takes long walks. President Taft, whose habits are rather sedentary, gets most of his exercise in the form of golf. Gov. Wilson is more of an out-of-door man than the President, and much less of an out-of-door man than the Colonel. In build they are as different as possible. To choose from all their differences one likeness, such as their natures of tobacco and from this one likeness to infer anything about the effect of tobacco on health is absurd.

The truth is that we are much further from knowledge of the effects of tobacco than from knowledge of the effects of alcohol. We are much further from an agreement among experts. Everybody knows that it is possible for a man to injure his health by smoking a lot. Everybody knows that few persons are injured by smoking two or three times a day. Everybody knows that good cigars cost money and that the best pipe tobacco costs very little.

By the way, is this "notable fact" a fact? Is it true that neither the President nor Gov. Wilson smokes?

The Growing of Fruit.
From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.
A recent census report shows that in spite of the great increase in population the output of deciduous fruit merely held its own during the last decade. The area planted to small fruits actually declined more than 10 per cent, and the total production of small fruits showed a falling off.
Are Americans losing the skill or patience necessary to raise fruit? Abandonment of this field of production can scarcely be thought of as voluntary, for market prices go higher and marketing facilities better. Some other reason must be sought.
Fruit raising, like most other occupations, is more exacting than it was a few years ago. The day when a man might plant a few acres to apple trees, for instance, and then pay no further attention to them except at picking time, has passed. Trees must be trimmed, sprayed, and cultivated if the fruit is to be either marketable or even consumable with pleasure at home. Fruit raising as an industry has developed like every other industry.
Possibly fruit raisers, as a country-wide class, have not kept pace. Very few industries will thrive without encouragement.

While the United States is rich in soil, just last year, 6,000 short tons of it were taken from the ground last year, and more than 60,000 tons of this were used in the fertilizer business.
